1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 California forces girls to play school sports on an uneven playing field. Girls must 3 compete against boys who possess inherent physical advantages over them. Because 4 Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, 20 U.S.C. § 1681 et seq., precludes this 5 practice by its plain text, the United States filed this suit to protect California’s girls from 6 this reprehensible unfairness.

7 Title IX is “widely recognized as the source of a vast expansion of athletic 8 opportunities for women in the nation’s schools and universities.” Mansourian v.
9 Regents of Univ. of California, 602 F.3d 957, 961 (9th Cir. 2010). The statute “was 10 enacted in response to evidence of pervasive discrimination against women with respect 11 to educational opportunities.” McCormick v. School Dist. of Mamaroneck, 370 F.3d 12 275, 286 (2d Cir. 2004); see also N. Haven Bd. of Ed. v. Bell, 456 U.S. 512, 523 n.13 13 (1982). Among other accomplishments, the statute has triggered “a virtual revolution for 14 girls and women in sports” since its passage. Adams v. Sch. Bd. of St. Johns Cnty., 57 15 F.4th 791, 818 (11th Cir. 2022) (en banc) (Lagoa, J., concurring) (citation omitted).

16 Defendants’ discriminatory “gender identity policy”<sup>1</sup> winds back this historic 17 progress. This unjustifiable policy of Defendants California Department of Education 18 (“CDE”) and California Interscholastic Federation (“CIF”) (collectively “California”), 19 throws out biology and forces girls to compete against boys with inherent physical 20 advantages, and allow boys onto their locker rooms, so long as those boys subjectively 21 identify themselves as girls.

22 The United States’ Complaint alleges California’s gender identity policy harms
23 girl athletes and violates Title IX. See generally Compl. ECF No. 1. The Complaint 24 describes how the policy facially discriminates against girls, id. ¶¶ 45-55, and how 25 California has implicitly acknowledged as much, id. ¶¶ 56-64. The Complaint further

27 28 <sup>1</sup> See, e.g., Compl. ¶ 52 (CIF Bylaw 300.D), 46 (California Sex Equity in Education Act, Cal. Educ. Code § 221.5(f)) (collectively “gender identity policy”).

1 alleges specific examples of harm to girls, id. ¶¶ 65-89, and California’s repeated failure 2 to listen to girls’ objections to this harmful discriminatory policy, id. ¶¶ 90-97.

3 California filed a Motion to Dismiss, ECF No. 25. In its Motion, California
4 primarily argues that Title IX extends to gender identity, that the United States has failed
5 to allege a traditional Title IX claim under a Policy Interpretation of the athletics 6 regulation, and that California lacked clear notice it was violating Title IX under the 7 Spending Clause. See Defs’ Br., ECF No. 25-1.

8 This Court should deny California’s Motion. Title IX prohibits discrimination on 9 the basis of sex—not gender identity. California’s gender identity policy is untethered 10 from the very justification for sex-separate sports under Title IX: innate biological 11 differences between males and females that make competition between them inherently 12 unfair. The policy accordingly violates both the underlying biological justification for 13 separating sports and Title IX’s overriding command that the sex-separation in athletics 14 cannot disadvantage either sex.

15 California’s attempts to sidestep Title IX’s requirements fail. It cites inapposite
16 case law that does not deal with Title IX and sports, and relies on a Policy Interpretation 17 that is inapplicable to its gender identity policy because that policy fails to separate by 18 sex in the first place. As for notice that its actions violate Title IX, California had plenty;
19 Title IX’s text, its implementing regulations, relevant case law, and Executive Orders 20 provided California with all the notice that precedent requires.

21 II. ARGUMENT

22 A. Title IX Prohibits California’s Discriminatory Gender Identity Policy 23 That Permits Some Boys to Participate in Sports Designated for Girls.

24 Title IX prohibits discrimination on the basis of “sex,” and does not mention or 25 encompass California’s preferred “gender identity” classification. Biological “sex” is 26 the only justifiable reason educational programs can separate sports in the first place.
27 Title IX’s prohibition of sex discrimination permits educational programs to separate 28 competitive sports by sex only because the biological differences between the sexes

1 naturally give males an unfair advantage. Because of this male advantage, the sexes are 2 not similarly situated in athletics, and separating sports teams by sex is not prohibited 3 “discrimination” when such separation does not treat either sex worse than the other.

4 In comparison, California’s gender identity policy violates Title IX because it 5 treats females worse than males. The policy violates both the underlying biological 6 justification for separating sports and Title IX’s overriding command that the sex-7 separation in athletics cannot disadvantage either sex. Contrary to Title IX, the policy 8 jettisons biology as its justification for separation and causes an imbalanced, unfair 9 disadvantage to female athletes.

10 1. Title IX Prohibits Discrimination on the Basis Of “Sex” Not “Gender 11 Identity.”

12 Title IX prohibits discrimination on the basis of “sex” according to that term’s 13 plain biological and binary (male/female) meaning. Despite California’s urging (at 3) 14 that Title IX’s reference to “sex” encompasses “gender identity and gender expression,” 15 California’s expansive definition conflicts with the statutory text and history of Title IX.

16 a. Text

17 Title IX requires that “[n]o person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, 18 be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to 19 discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial 20 assistance.” 20 U.S.C. § 1681(a). Because the statute does not define “sex,” the term 21 should “be interpreted as taking [its] ordinary, contemporary, common meaning.” 22 Sandifer v. United States Steel Corp., 571 U.S. 220, 227 (2014) (citation omitted).
23 When Congress passed Title IX in 1972, contemporaneous dictionaries defined “sex” as 24 what the term has always meant: biological sex. See, e.g., Roe v. Critchfield, 137 F.4th 25 912, 929 (9th Cir. 2025) (“[F]rom the time of the enactment of Title IX and its 26 implementing regulations, the scheme has authorized schools to maintain sex-segregated 27 facilities, and contemporary dictionary definitions commonly defined “sex” in terms that 28 refer to students’ sex assigned at birth.” (emphasis added)); Adams v. Sch. Bd. Of St.

1 Johns County, 57 F.4th 791, 812-13 (11th Cir. 2022) (en banc) (consulting nine 2 contemporary dictionaries for definitions); see also 57 F.4th at 812-15 (finding Title IX 3 refers to biological sex). And Title IX’s statutory text uses the term consistent with 4 biological sex, referring to a binary classification based on biological differences. For 5 instance, right after the general prohibition in 20 U.S.C. § 1681(a), the statute expressly 6 provides that this “section shall not preclude father-son or mother-daughter activities at 7 an educational institution, but if such activities are provided for students of one sex, 8 opportunities for reasonably comparable activities shall be provided for students of the 9 other sex.” 20 U.S.C. § 1681(a)(8) (emphasis added). Similarly, the statute provides a 10 grace period for an “institution which admits only students of one sex to being an 11 institution which admits students of both sexes.” Id. § 1681(a)(2) (emphasis added).
12 Title IX elsewhere also clarifies that “nothing contained herein shall be construed to 13 prohibit any educational institution receiving funds under this Act, from maintaining 14 separate living facilities for the different sexes.” Id. § 1686. These provisions could not 15 sensibly function if the term “sex” includes “gender identity,” which, unlike “sex,” is a 16 spectrum and may not be limited to two categories.

17                   b.     Title IX’s Historical Context

18                   Historical context further confirms that Congress used the word “sex” in its 19 ordinary biological sense and that Congress’s bar on sex discrimination still allowed 20 separating biological males and females in sports. “Title IX was enacted in response to 21 evidence of pervasive discrimination against women with respect to educational 22 opportunities, which was documented in hearings held in 1970 by the House Special 23 Subcommittee on Education.” McCormick, 370 F.3d at 286; see also N. Haven Bd. of 24 Ed., 456 U.S. at 523 n.13. Against that backdrop, members of Congress voting on Title 25 IX and any politically engaged citizen would have understood the statute as directed at 26 eliminating discrimination in education based on biological sex—i.e., unequal treatment 27 of males and females—consistent with the term’s ordinary meaning.

1       Contemporaneous post-enactment history confirms Title IX refers to biological 2 sex and does not include discrimination based on “gender identity.” Shortly after 3 enacting Title IX in 1972, Congress passed the Javits Amendment that directed the 4 Education Department’s predecessor to create regulations “implementing . . . [T]itle IX,” 5 which “shall include” regulations on “athletic activities.” Pub. L. No. 93-380, § 844, 88 6 Stat. 484, 612 (1974). The agency then issued regulations that allow sex separation in 7 many contexts—including sports. 40 Fed. Reg. 24,128, 24,141-43 (June 4, 1975).<sup>2</sup>
8 Those “roughly contemporaneous[]” regulations “have remained consistent over time” 9 and are thus “especially useful in determining the statute’s meaning.” Loper Bright 10 Enters. v. Raimondo, 603 U.S. 369, 370, 394 (2024). Moreover, that evidence is 11 particularly strong here because Congress got the chance to disapprove these regulations 12 before they went into effect and chose not to. See Grove City Coll. v. Bell, 465 U.S. 555, 13 568 (1984); N. Haven Bd. of Educ., 456 U.S. at 530-35.

14       Congress’s actions in the more than 50 years following Title IX’s enactment 15 further confirm that “sex” in this statute does not encompass “gender identity.” In other 16 statutory contexts, Congress has acted affirmatively to address gender-identity 17 discrimination as a distinct category separate from sex discrimination. E.g., 34 U.S.C.
18 § 30501(1) (amended in 2009) (“[I]ncidence of violence motivated by the actual or 19 perceived race, . . . gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, or disability of the victim

22 § 106.41(b) (“a recipient may operate or sponsor separate teams for members of each sex 23 where selection for such teams is based upon competitive skill or the activity involved is

6 prejudice based on the actual or perceived race, . . . gender, sexual orientation, gender 7 identity, or disability of the victim" (emphasis added)); id. § 12291(b)(13)(A) (amended 8 in 2013) (prohibiting discrimination in certain federally funded programs "on the basis 9 of actual or perceived race, . . . sex, gender identity . . . , sexual orientation, or disability" 10 (emphases added)). These post-Title IX enactments illustrate that Congress knows how 11 to prohibit discrimination based on "gender identity" when it wishes to do so. DHS v.
12 MacLean, 574 U.S. 383, 394 (2015). But Congress did not do so for Title IX.

13 Finally, multiple courts have confirmed that Title IX allows separating the sexes 14 and that Title IX does not include discrimination based on "gender identity." See, e.g., 15 Tennessee v. Cardona, 2024 WL 3453880, at *2-3 (6th Cir. July 17, 2024); Alabama v.
16 U.S. Sec'y of Educ., 2024 WL 3981994, at *4-5 (11th Cir. Aug. 22, 2024) (collecting 17 cases). Moreover, the Supreme Court, in denying a stay of orders invalidating a Title IX 18 rule that tried to change Title IX to include gender identity, confirmed that "all Members 19 of the Court today accept that the plaintiffs were entitled to preliminary injunctive relief 20 as to . . . the central provision that newly defines sex discrimination to include 21 discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation and gender identity." Dep't of Educ. v.
22 Louisiana, 603 U.S. 866, 867 (2024) (emphasis added).

23 This Court should accordingly reject California's request to extend Title IX 24 beyond its plain meaning of biological "sex."

25 2. The Biological Differences Between the Sexes Provide the Non-26 discriminatory Justification for Sex-Separated Sports.

27 Title IX permits educational programs to separate competitive sports by sex only 28 because the biological differences between the sexes naturally give males an unfair

1 advantage in sports. Because of this male advantage, the sexes are not similarly situated 2 in athletics, and separating sports teams by sex is not “discrimination” prohibited under 3 Title IX when such separation does not treat members of either sex worse than the other.

4 Title IX carries “the ‘normal definition of discrimination.’” Jackson v.

5 Birmingham Bd. of Educ., 544 U.S. 167, 174 (2005) (citation omitted). And the 6 “ordinary meaning of the word ‘discrimination’” is treating individuals or groups that 7 “are similarly situated differently without sufficient justification for the difference in 8 treatment.” Ala. Dep’t of Revenue v. CSX Transp., Inc., 575 U.S. 21, 26 (2015)
9 (quotation marks omitted); see, e.g., Whirlpool Corp. v. Marshall, 445 U.S. 1, 19 (1980)
10 (“An employer ‘discriminates’ against an employee only when he treats that employee 11 less favorably than he treats others similarly situated.”). Title IX thus prohibits practices 12 that subject members of one biological sex to less favorable treatment than similarly 13 situated members of the other sex. Jackson, 544 U.S. at 174 (citation omitted).

14 Because the two sexes are usually similarly situated when it comes to educational 15 programs, Title IX usually prohibits sex separation. For example, the statute prohibits 16 separate male and female math classes because for classes they are similarly situated; 17 biological sex is irrelevant. Biological sex, however, is highly relevant to athletics.

18 Separating sports by sex is not “discrimination” prohibited by Title IX because it 19 treats similarly situated individuals equally by distinguishing the sexes based on relevant 20 biological differences. Title IX itself explicitly recognizes that when biology is relevant, 21 sex-separation is not discrimination. Congress clarified that Title IX’s general bar on 22 sex discrimination must not “be construed to prohibit any” federal-funding recipient 23 “from maintaining separate living facilities for the different sexes.” 20 U.S.C. § 1686
24 (emphasis added). This “[i]nterpretation,” id., of Title IX’s general sex-discrimination 25 bar confirms that Title IX does not prohibit sex separation when based on real 26 differences rooted in biology. It also shows that Congress understood that such sex 27 separation is not only beneficial but also sometimes necessary to ensure equal 28 opportunities for women.

1        This aligns with Supreme Court decisions that have repeatedly confirmed that 2 considering sex is not always discriminatory because the genuine biological differences 3 between the sexes sometimes make them dissimilarly situated. The Court recently 4 reconfirmed that the Constitution “does not make sex a proscribed classification” 5 because the sexes are often not similarly situated due to real biological differences.
6 United States v. Skrmetti, 145 S. Ct. 1816, 1828 (2025) (quotation omitted); see also id.
7 at 1878-79 (Sotomayor, J., dissenting) (“No one disputes that . . . there are ‘biological 8 differences between men and women’” and that “such physical differences” mean “sex is 9 not altogether a proscribed classification.” (citation omitted)). The Supreme Court has 10 also upheld laws that made sex distinctions based on the real biological differences 11 between the sexes. In Michael M. v. Superior Court of Sonoma County, 450 U.S. 464 12 (1981), the Court upheld a statutory rape law focused on protecting girls because “young 13 men and young women are not similarly situated with respect to the problems and the 14 risks of sexual intercourse.” Id. at 471. The Court explained that the Equal Protection 15 Clause does not require “things which are different in fact” “to be treated in law as 16 though they were the same,” and it has therefore “consistently upheld statutes where the 17 gender classification is not invidious, but rather realistically reflects the fact that the 18 sexes are not similarly situated in certain circumstances.” Id. at 469 (citations omitted).
19 Likewise in Tuan Anh Nguyen v. I.N.S., 533 U.S. 53 (2001), the Court upheld a statute 20 making it easier to claim citizenship for a child born abroad to an American mother than 21 to an American father because “[f]athers and mothers are not similarly situated with 22 regard to the proof of biological parenthood.” Id. at 63. “To fail to acknowledge even 23 our most basic biological differences,” the Court explained, “risk[ed] . . . disserving” the 24 equal protection guarantee. Id. at 73.

25        The Court has thus repeatedly affirmed that the “[i]nherent differences between 26 men and women . . . remain cause for celebration.” United States v. Virginia, 518 U.S.
27 515, 533 (1996) (“VMF”). Based on these inherent differences, sex can “represent[] a 28 legitimate, accurate proxy” to pursue permissible legislative ends, Craig v. Boren, 429

1 U.S. 190, 204 (1976), such as “provid[ing] for the special problems of women,”
2 Weinberger v. Wiesenfeld, 420 U.S. 636, 653 (1975); see also VMI, 518 U.S. at 533-34
3 (Sex-based classifications may be used to compensate women for particular disabilities, 4 promote equal opportunity, and “advance full development of the talent and capacities of 5 our Nation’s people.” (citations omitted)).

6 More importantly, the Supreme Court has also particularly recognized the inherent 7 physical differences between the sexes in physical fitness and athletics. In VMI, the 8 Court recognized an inherent male advantage when it found that admitting women to a 9 previously all-male military academy “would undoubtedly require” that institution “to 10 adjust aspects of the physical training programs.” 518 U.S. at 550 n.19; accord Bauer v.
11 Lynch, 812 F.3d 340, 350 (4th Cir. 2016) (finding FBI did not violate Title VII when 12 using different physical fitness standards for agent candidates based on sex because 13 “[m]en and women simply are not physiologically the same for the purposes of physical 14 fitness programs.”).<sup>3</sup> And lower courts have recognized for decades that “the distinct 15 differences in physical characteristics and capabilities between the sexes” permit sex-16 separated athletics under federal law. Cape v. Tenn. Secondary Sch. Athletic Ass’n, 563 17 F.2d 793, 795 (6th Cir. 1977) (“It takes little imagination to realize that were play and 18 competition not separated by sex, the great bulk of the females would quickly be 19 eliminated from participation and denied any meaningful opportunity for athletic 20 involvement.”), abrogated on other grounds by Brentwood Acad. v. Tenn. Secondary 21 Sch. Athletic Ass’n, 190 F.3d 705, 706 (6th Cir. 1999). That includes the Ninth Circuit, 22 which long ago saw “no question” that sex-separated athletics permissibly accommodate 23 “real differences between the sexes.” Clark v. Ariz. Interscholastic Ass’n, 695 F.2d 24 1126, 1131 (9th Cir. 1982) (“Clark I”) (citing, e.g., Michael M., 450 U.S. at 469).

<sup>3</sup> Congress itself has provided that “physiological differences between male and female individuals” warrant sex-based differences in physical-fitness admissions standards at military academies. Pub. L. No. 94-106, Title VIII, § 803(a), 89 Stat. 531, 537 (Oct. 7, 1975); 10 U.S.C. § 7442 note.

1       These inherent physical differences justify separation in sports because males have 2 an unfair biological athletic advantage over females. See, e.g., id. at 1131 ([D]ue to 3 average physiological differences, males would displace females to a substantial extent if 4 they were allowed to compete for positions on the volleyball team.”); Clark v. Ariz.
5 Interscholastic Ass ’n, 886 F.2d 1191, 1193 (9th Cir. 1989) (“Clark II”) (“If males are 6 permitted to displace females on the school volleyball team even to the extent of one 7 player . . . the goal of equal participation by females in interscholastic athletics is set 8 back, not advanced.”); Adams., 57 F.4th at 819-20 (Lagoa, J., concurring) (discussing 9 scientific literature regarding biological advantages of males over females in sports); 10 O’Connor v. Bd. of Educ. of Sch. Dist. 23, 449 U.S. 1301, 1307 (1980) (Stevens, Circuit 11 Justice) (“Without a gender-based classification in competitive contact sports, there 12 would be a substantial risk that boys would dominate the girls’ programs and deny them 13 an equal opportunity to compete in interscholastic events.”). And, as explained infra 14 Part A.4, the long-standing Title IX regulation also specifically uses biology to justify 15 separating sports that involve “competitive skill” or “contact.” 34 C.F.R. § 106.41(b).

16       That biological differences justify sex-separation in sports highlights another 17 fundamental flaw in California’s urging that Title IX encompasses “gender identity” 18 here. If “sex” means “gender identity” then California has no non-discriminatory basis 19 for separating sports at all.

20       Accordingly, because males have an unfair physical advantage, males and females 21 are not similarly situated in athletics, separating sports by sex is not “discrimination” 22 under Title IX when the separation does not treat either sex worse than the other. When 23 the separation does treat one sex worse, the separation is discriminatory.

24           3.       California’s Gender Identity Policy Violates Title IX by Harming 25                   Girls and Their Equal Opportunities.

26       California’s gender identity policy treats females worse than males. The policy 27 violates both the underlying justification for separating sports and Title IX’s overriding 28 command that the sex separation in athletics cannot disadvantage either sex. Contrary to

1 Title IX, California’s policy jettisons biology as its justification for separation and causes 2 an imbalanced, unfair disadvantage to female athletes.

3 As discussed above, the physical advantages of males make the sexes dissimilarly 4 situated in athletics and provides the only justification for why Title IX does not prohibit 5 separating teams by sex as discrimination. California’s policy breaks this justification.
6 Title IX prohibits an educational program from allowing some male athletes to compete 7 on female teams because that directly undermines the justification for separating the 8 sports in the first place. Although sex-separated athletics are not ordinarily 9 discriminatory under Title IX, that is because such classification is permissibly 10 accounting for real biological differences between women and men to avoid subjecting 11 women to a competitive disadvantage. When an educational program such as 12 California’s chooses to allow some male athletes to compete on female teams, thereby 13 subjecting females to an unfair competitive disadvantage, it severely undermines its 14 justification for separating the teams at all. In other words, since California’s gender 15 identity policy disregards the real biological differences between boys and girls, it is now 16 “discriminating” by separating the sexes without any valid basis (and at the same time 17 disadvantaging one of the sexes). Having thrown out the biological justification, 18 California’s policy is akin to separated math classes where there are no relevant 19 biological differences between the sexes.

20 California’s argument (at 8-11) that it is accounting for trans-identifying athletes 21 cannot override that biology justifies separation under Title IX, and that the separation 22 cannot disadvantage either of the sexes. The rationale that generally justifies sex-23 separated athletics under Title IX applies equally to athletes who are trans-identifying, 24 “meaning that their gender identity does not align with their biological sex.” Skrmetti, 25 145 S. Ct. at 1824. Regardless of whether these athletes identify with the opposite sex, 26 they possess the biology of their own sex.

27 Nor does excluding males who identify as females from female teams constitute 28 “discrimination” “on the basis of sex” under Title IX. When it comes to competitive

1 athletics, males are not similarly situated to females given their physiological 2 differences. This remains true whether or not the male identifies as a female. As the 3 teams are permissibly separated based on biological sex, it does not somehow become 4 prohibited sex discrimination to neutrally apply that valid criterion to trans-identifying 5 students like everyone else. Their subjective gender identity has nothing to do with the 6 objective biological differences justifying sex-separated sports. Accordingly, barring a 7 trans-identifying male from competing on female teams is not providing less favorable 8 treatment than females receive. Jackson, 544 U.S. at 174. Rather, it is ensuring equal 9 treatment for both sexes and not unfairly harming female athletes.<sup>4</sup>

10 Put differently, California’s gender identity policy is not seeking to prevent 11 discrimination on the basis of sex, but rather instituting a preferential “accommodation” 12 on the basis of gender identity. See Doe 2 v. Shanahan, 917 F.3d 694, 707 (D.C. Cir.
13 2019) (Williams, J., concurring) (rejecting challenge to sex-separated military facilities 14 and standards). According to California’s policy, while some males are validly excluded 15 from competing against females, other males must be allowed to do so—despite the 16 objective physiological advantages that they too have as males—merely because they 17 subjectively identify as females. The policy turns Title IX on its head by requiring 18 schools to discriminate in favor of some males at the expense of and harm to females.<sup>5</sup>

19 Moreover, California’s policy also clearly violates Title IX’s purpose: Title IX
20 was manifestly passed to promote “girls’ and women’s rights.” Adams, 57 F.4th at 817 21

22 <sup>4</sup> Title IX permits schools to allow girls to participate in boys’ sports where 23 consistent with safety and privacy, as doing so would not afford girls the competitive 24 biological advantage that boys would gain if allowed to participate in girls’ sports. E.g., 25 Clark I, 695 F.3d at 1127, 1130 (finding “precluding boys from playing on girls’ teams, 26 even though girls are permitted to participate on boys’ athletic teams,” is “a legitimate 27 means of providing athletic opportunities for girls”). Allowing girls to play in boys’ 28 sports thus and does not subject any athlete to less favorable treatment based on that athlete’s sex. Jackson, 544 U.S. at 174.

29 <sup>5</sup> Further showing the breakdown of Defendants’ policy, it also conflicts with its 30 purported justification because it discriminates based on “gender identity.” The policy 31 permits males who “identify as female” to play in female sports, but at the same time 32 precludes males who “identify as male” to play in female sports.

1 (Lagoa, J., concurring); see also McCormick, 370 F.3d at 286 (“Title IX was enacted in 2 response to evidence of pervasive discrimination against women with respect to 3 educational opportunities.”). And Title IX has achieved substantial success in that 4 regard, especially in sports. “[O]ne need not look further than the neighborhood park or 5 local college campus to see the remarkable impact Title IX has had on girls and women
6 in sports.” Adams, 57 F.4th at 818 (Lagoa, J., concurring). “In 1971, before Congress 7 enacted the statute, approximately 300,000 girls and 3.67 million boys played 8 competitive high school sports nationwide.” McCormick, 370 F.3d at 286. Title IX “has 9 had stellar results” with girls’ participation growing to approximately 3.25 million in 10 2011. Louisiana v. U.S. Dep’t of Educ., 737 F. Supp. 3d 377, 390 (W.D. La. 2024).

11 California’s policy, which “comingl[es] both biological sexes in the realm of 12 female athletics,” has “vast societal consequences” and “threaten[s] to undermine one of 13 Title IX’s major achievements, giving young women an equal opportunity to participate 14 in sports.” Adams, 57 F.4th at 818, 821 (Lagoa, J., concurring) (brackets omitted); see 15 Clark II, 886 F.2d at 1193 (“If males are permitted to displace females on the school 16 volleyball team even to the extent of one player . . . , the goal of equal participation by 17 females in interscholastic athletics is set back, not advanced.”). This just further 18 confirms that California’s policy violates Title IX. See Abramski v. United States, 573 19 U.S. 169, 179 (2014) (“[The Court] must (as usual) interpret the relevant words not in a 20 vacuum, but with reference to the statutory context, structure, history, and purpose.” 21 (quotation marks omitted)).

22 This Court thus should find California’s gender identity policy violates Title IX.

23 4. The Athletics Regulation Further Confirms California’s Gender 24 Identity Policy Violates Title IX and Girls’ Equal Opportunities.

25 The decades-old athletics regulation that expressly contemplates sex-separated 26 athletics and requires equal athletic opportunities confirms that California’s gender 27 identity policy violates Title IX. See 34 C.F.R. § 106.41. Like the statute, that 28 regulation first generally prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex in athletics. Id.

1   § 106.41(a). Like the statutory analysis above, the regulation then recognizes the 2   physical differences in athletics by clarifying that programs can separate teams “for 3   members of each sex where selection for such teams is based upon competitive skill or 4   the activity involved is a contact sport.” Id. § 106.41(b). But also like the analysis 5   above, the regulation requires that this separation and the program overall cannot harm 6   one of the sexes, but rather must still “provide equal athletic opportunity for members of 7   both sexes.” Id. § 106.41(b); see also, e.g., Tennessee v. Dep’t of Educ., 104 F.4th 577, 8   611 (6th Cir. 2024) (“[A]thletics programs solely used biological sex as a classification 9   method for decades—an approach authorized by existing Title IX regulations.”).

10   As above, Congress specifically requested these regulations and that they include 11   for athletics “reasonable provisions considering the nature of particular sports” and 12   declined to disapprove these regulations. Education Amendments of 1974, Pub. L. No.
13   93-380, § 844, 88 Stat. 484, 612 (1974); see McCormick, 370 F.3d at 287. Congress 14   thus expressly identified “the nature of particular sports” as a relevant factor in 15   “implementing the provisions of title IX.” 88 Stat. at 612. This direction reflected 16   Congress’s acknowledgement that, while sex is irrelevant to how an student performs in 17   a classroom or on the job, sex does affect how an student performs on the sports field.
18   See McCormick, 370 F.3d at 286. And as above, this regulation “accurately reflect[s] 19   congressional intent,” Grove City, 465 U.S. at 568, and Title IX’s original public 20   meaning, see Loper Bright, 603 U.S. at 394.

21   Like the statute, the regulation uses “sex,” not gender identity, and provides no 22   exception to biology-based sex-separation for some males.<sup>6</sup> Most importantly, the 23   regulation requires any such separation not harm girls, but rather must provide them 24   “equal athletic opportunity.” 34 C.F.R. § 106.41(c). While male sports maintain fair 25   and safe competition in California, Defendants’ gender identity policy forces female 26

27   

<sup>6</sup> Males do not fit into the regulation’s “try-out” exception when a program offers 28   a sport for one sex and not the other and “athletic opportunities for members of that [excluded] sex have previously been limited.” 34 C.F.R. § 106.41(b).

1 athletes to participate in unfair and unsafe competition, where female athletes risk 2 injuries and are deprived of awards and advancement; the discriminatory policy thus 3 denies them equal athletic opportunities. See, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 1-2, 8, 90-95; Exec. Order 4 No. 14201, 90 Fed. Reg. at 9279 (“In recent years, many educational institutions and 5 athletic associations have allowed men to compete in women’s sports. This is 6 demeaning, unfair, and dangerous to women and girls, and denies women and girls the 7 equal opportunity to participate and excel in competitive sports.”); McCormick, 370 F.3d 8 at 294-95 (“Treating girls differently regarding a matter so fundamental to the 9 experience of sports—the chance to be champions—is inconsistent with Title IX’s 10 mandate of equal opportunity for both sexes.”).

11 This Court should accordingly find that the regulation, and its equal opportunity 12 mandate, confirm that California’s gender identity policy violates Title IX.

13 B. California’s Attempts to Sidestep Title IX Fail.

14 1. California’s Cases are Inapposite in this Context of Title IX and Sex-15 Separated Sports.

16 California cites inapposite case law in an attempt to defend its inequitable policy 17 that disadvantages girls. All these cases either concern contexts outside of Title IX and 18 athletics, or particularly note the limited reach of their precedential value. This Court 19 should accordingly find these cases provide California no shield against its Title IX 20 discrimination against girls in athletics.

21 First, California incorrectly urges (at 9) that Bostock v. Clayton County, 590 U.S.
22 644 (2020), morphs Title IX’s prohibition on sex discrimination to also include gender 23 identity, such that Title IX bars the longstanding practice of sex-separated athletics. The 24 Bostock decision, however, does not extend to Title IX and athletics here. Bostock itself 25 notes its limitations, specifically warning it did “not purport to address bathrooms, locker 26 rooms, or anything else of the kind.” 590 U.S. at 681.

27 Even if Bostock somehow applied to Title IX here, Bostock is entirely consistent 28 with the United States’ position. In determining whether a practice discriminates based

1 on sex, Bostock requires a similarly situated analysis: “[D]iscrimination” means 2 “treating [an] individual worse than others who are similarly situated.” 590 U.S. at 657.
3 In other words, Bostock stressed that to determine whether a policy “discriminate[s],” a 4 court must use a comparator—i.e., compare the plaintiff to “others who are similarly 5 situated.” Id. In Bostock, male and female employees were similarly situated because 6 “[a]n individual’s homosexuality or transgender status is not relevant to employment 7 decisions.” Id. at 660. Unlike in Bostock, males and females are not similarly situated 8 when it comes to sports; sex is relevant. Otherwise, California would have no non-9 discriminatory basis to separate athletic teams by sex in the first place.

10 The Supreme Court’s recent Skrmetti decision confirms that separating athletes 11 based on sex, as Title IX requires, does not violate Bostock. In Skrmetti, the challenged 12 law, “[o]n its face,” classified “based on age” and “based on medical use,” not “on the 13 basis of transgender status.” 145 S. Ct. at 1829-33. Even when asked to apply Bostock, 14 the Skrmetti Court found facially neutral laws do not discriminate based on gender 15 identity even if they disproportionately effect trans-identifying individuals, such as by 16 banning use of a medical treatment for a condition that “only transgender individuals” 17 would seek to remedy. Id. at 1833. Similarly here, correctly interpreting Title IX as 18 requiring that athletics be separated by sex “does not classify [or otherwise discriminate] 19 on the basis of transgender status,” as one cannot “automatically switch” male to female 20 in the sports context. Id. And this remains so despite California’s attempt to focus on 21 potential effects on trans-identifying athletes. Cf. id. at 1852 (Barrett, J. concurring)
22 (“[T]ransgender status implicates several other areas of legitimate regulatory policy—23 ranging from access to restrooms to eligibility for boys’ and girls’ sports teams . . .
24 legislatures have many valid reasons to make policy in these areas.”).

25 If Bostock applied as California wishes, then it would flip Title IX upside down.
26 For example, Title IX makes clear that recipients can “maintain separate living facilities 27 for the different sexes.” 20 U.S.C. § 1686. If Bostock applied how California claims, 28 then this provision (and the other Title IX sex-separation carveouts) “would be rendered

1 meaningless” and bizarrely provide double protection for trans-identifying students.
2 Adams, 57 F.4th at 813-14 & n.7. A person “would be able to live in both living 3 facilities associated with their biological sex and living facilities associated with their 4 gender identity or transgender status.” Id.<sup>7</sup> Thus, Bostock does not convert a practice of 5 keeping males who identify as females off female teams into “discrimination” “on the 6 basis of sex” under Title IX.

7 Second, California’s other cases are unpersuasive. California relies (at 2, 9) on 8 Doe v. Snyder, 28 F.4th 103, 114 (9th Cir. 2022), and Grabowski v. Ariz. Bd. of Regents, 9 69 F.4th 1110, 1116-18 & n.1 (9th Cir. 2023), but these cases do not involve separating 10 athletes based on sex, where the sexes are not similarly situated. In Snyder, minor 11 females challenged an Arizona law precluding insurance coverage for sex change 12 procedures. The Ninth Circuit upheld the district court’s determination that they failed 13 to show double mastectomy surgeries were medically necessary or safe and effective for 14 them, and its reference to Bostock and Title IX was unnecessary dicta. 28 F.4th at 114-15; id. at 113 (“We do not reach the merits of Doe’s constitutional and statutory 16 challenges”).<sup>8</sup> In Grabowski, the court concluded that discrimination on the basis of 17 sexual orientation can be a form of sex-based discrimination under Title IX. 69 F.4th at 18 1116-18 & n.1. While the backdrop of the sexual harassment claim was athletics, that

---

20 <sup>7</sup> In any event, Bostock does not apply to athletics under Title IX. If any non-21 abrogated Ninth Circuit precedent says otherwise, the United States preserves an 22 argument that Bostock does not apply to Title IX at all. The Supreme Court recently 23 made clear that it has not decided “whether Bostock’s reasoning reaches beyond the Title 24 VII context.” Skrmetti, 145 S. Ct. at 1834. And rightly so: Bostock is a case about Title 25 VII, not Title IX. See, e.g., Tennessee, 2024 WL 3453880, at *2-3 (concluding that 26 Bostock does not extend to Title IX because “the statutes use materially different 27 language,” “serve different goals,” and “have distinct defenses”); Alabama, 2024 WL
28 3981994, at *4-5 (collecting cases); Soule, 90 F.4th at 63 (Menashi, J., concurring) (discussing “important differences between the two statutes”).

8 Regardless, Supreme Court’s decision in Skrmetti has abrogated any contrary language in Snyder. See Folwell v. Kadel, 145 S. Ct. 2838 (2025) (vacating and remanding a case on similar issues in light of Skrmetti); cf. Lange v. Houston Cnty., ---
F.4th ----, No. 22-13626, 2025 WL 2602633 (11th Cir. Sept. 9, 2025) (en banc) (applying Skrmetti to a similar claim as that at issue in Snyder and concluding no sex discrimination).

1 setting was not relevant to the claim, which could have been set in the classroom.
2 Compared to here, the plaintiffs' claim had, and sexual orientation has, nothing to do
3 with sports and inherent biological advantages. Grabowski thus did not involve a claim 4 where it was relevant that the sexes are not similarly situated, i.e., where the real 5 biological differences between the sexes are relevant.

6 California similarly missteps in relying (at 9, 17) on the limited holdings of Doe v.
7 Horne, 115 F.4th 1083 (9th Cir. 2024), petition for cert. filed, No. 24-449 (U.S. Oct. 22, 8 2024), and Hecox v. Little, 104 F.4th 1061 (9th Cir. 2024), cert. granted, No. 24-38, 9 2025 WL 1829165 (U.S. July 3, 2025). In Horne, the court found no abuse of discretion 10 in the district court's preliminary injunction of an Arizona sports statute as applied to 11 two students. 115 F.4th at 1112. The court specified the limitations of the decision — 12 namely, that the “narrow preliminary injunction” applied to the particular facts and two 13 students and that nothing in the “decision, or in the district court’s decision, precludes 14 policymakers from adopting appropriate regulations in this field.” Id. The court 15 highlighted the district court’s finding that the statute purposefully targeted trans-16 identifying males. Id. at 1104-05. Most importantly, the Horne court particularly did 17 not decide the asserted Title IX claim and did not bless a blanket practice of allowing 18 males to participate in women’s sports, which California has here. Id. at 1110-11.

19 Similarly in the earlier Hecox decision, the court issued a limited decision as to 20 how an Idaho statute applied to the single plaintiff athlete. The court explained: “we 21 need not and do not decide the larger question of whether any restriction on transgender 22 participation in sports violates equal protection. Heightened scrutiny analysis is an 23 extraordinarily fact-bound test, and today we simply decide the narrow question of 24 whether the district court, on the record before it, abused its discretion in finding that 25 [student Hecox] was likely to succeed on the merits of her equal protection claim.” 104 26 F.4th at 1091. Like Horne, the Hecox decision particularly relied on the finding that the 27 statute purposefully targeted trans-identifying males. Id. at 1074-78. California here 28 cannot credibly claim that Congress enacted Title IX to purposefully target trans-

1 identifying students. Additionally, the Hecox court did not decide a Title IX claim, and 2 even vacated the district court’s injunction as applied beyond the particular student. Id.
3 at 1091. The Hecox and Horne cases accordingly do not shield California’s policy from 4 Title IX here. And, as above, this Court should view all of California’s cited cases in the 5 context of the Supreme Court’s recent decision in Skrmetti.

6       2. California’s Proposed Application of the Policy Interpretation of the 7       Regulation Conflicts with Title IX.

8       California attempts (at 13-18) to invoke an inapplicable Policy Interpretation 9 from 1979, 44 Fed. Reg. at 71415, to argue that the United States’ claims are not “valid.”
10 California seemingly submits that all Title IX claims involving sports must be rigidly 11 analyzed as “effective accommodation” or “equal treatment” claims according to that 12 Policy Interpretation. California’s gender identity policy that jettisons biology, however, 13 violates the statute and makes that Policy Interpretation of the regulations inapplicable.

14       The Policy Interpretation, and Ninth Circuit’s “effective accommodation” and 15 “effective treatment” precedents, all concern potential inequalities in properly sex- 16 separated athletics programs. The Policy Interpretation was geared toward analyzing 17 particular aspects of programs that already purported to separate by sex and only sex.
18 Here California never makes it that far. The gender identity policy does not purport to 19 separate only by sex, but also has an overriding exception for gender identity.
20 California’s failure to properly separate by sex in the first place causes a Title IX 21 violation because of the policy’s improper separation itself, before getting to any 22 secondary analysis of “effective accommodation” and “equal treatment.”

23       Beyond this, applying the Policy Interpretation here runs into other applicability 24 problems. Like the statute itself, see supra Part A.1, the Policy Interpretation from 1979 25 deals with “sex” not “gender identity.” And the previous Ninth Circuit cases, which also 26 dealt with “sex” and not “gender identity,” showed considerable deference to that Policy
27 Interpretation. See Mansourian v. Regents of Univ. of California, 602 F.3d 957, 965 n.9 28 (9th Cir. 2010) (finding Policy Interpretation entitled to deference under Chevron U.S.A.

1 v. Natural Res. Def. Council, 467 U.S. 837 (1984)); cf. Loper Bright Enters., 603 U.S. at 2 412 (overruling Chevron).

3 Moreover, the athletic regulation itself overall requires “equal athletic opportunity 4 for members of both sexes,” 34 C.F.R. § 106.41(c), and then explains that the effective 5 accommodation factor, id. § 106.41(c)(1), and equal treatment factors, id.
6 § 106.41(c)(2)-(10), are non-exhaustive “factors” to consider. This Court can and should 7 consider California’s overriding exception for trans-identifying males as a dispositive 8 factor. This Court should accordingly reject California’s argument that violations of 9 Title IX and equal opportunity can only come in the form of the Policy Interpretation and 10 rigid applications of traditional “effective accommodation” and “equal treatment” 11 claims. See Ames v. Ohio Dep’t of Youth Servs., 605 U.S. 303, 310-11 (2025) (affirming 12 discrimination depends on factual context, and tests for employment discrimination 13 “never intended to be rigid, mechanized, or ritualistic” (citation omitted)).

14 Even if somehow applicable, the United States has also plausibly alleged facts to 15 support a claim under California’s rigid application of the Policy Interpretation. The 16 gender identity policy violates the Policy Interpretation’s guidance that overall a policy 17 should not be “discriminatory in language or effect.” See 44 Fed. Reg. at 71418 (for 18 effective accommodation claims); id. at 71,417 (for equal treatment claims); see also 19 Compl. ¶ 10 (“Defendants’ adopted and implemented policies intentionally deny and 20 have the effect of denying girls equal educational opportunities, including athletics.”).
21 For effective accommodation, California acknowledges (at 14 n.2) that the Complaint
22 pleads several allegations about effective accommodation. This includes a whole section 23 entitled “Defendants’ Failure to Accommodate Girls’ Interests and Retaliation Against 24 Girls Expressing Opposition to Defendants’ Policies.” See Compl. ¶¶ 90-97 (emphasis 25 added).<sup>9</sup> For equal treatment, the Complaint gives five examples of trans-identifying 26

27 <sup>9</sup> California’s attack (18) on the Complaint’s inclusion of retaliation examples 28 incorrectly frames this lawsuit like a single student private enforcement action, rather than a federal enforcement action to remedy pervasive violations. The United States did (footnote cont’d on next page)

1 males competing in female sports. Because of the gender identity policy, each one of 2 those sports across the CIF system can no longer count as “female” toward the balance 3 of equal treatment between males and females, as those sports now are, at best, co-ed.

4       3.    California’s had Clear Notice that Title IX Prohibits Discrimination 5                   Based on Sex, not Gender Identity.

6       As above, according to its plain original public meaning from 1972, Title IX 7 prohibits discrimination based on sex, not gender identity, and does not allow trans-8 identifying males to compete in sports designated for girls. Multiple references in the 9 statute refer to sex as binary, which is inconsistent with the fluid concept of subjective 10 gender identity. The statute prohibits the same conduct today as it originally did in 1972.
11 And the statute’s clarity is reinforced by the longstanding regulation that Congress 12 specifically requested and was promulgated shortly after the statute’s enactment. See 13 Grove City, 465 U.S. at 568; Loper Bright, 603 U.S. at 394. Despite this clarity, 14 California submits (at 18-22) that it lacked clear notice that Title IX prohibits sex 15 discrimination and does not extend to gender identity. California’s claimed ignorance 16 conflicts with the plain notice that the statute itself provides, as well as multiple court 17 decisions and executive orders.

18       Congress has broad power to set the terms on which it disburses federal money, 19 but when Congress attaches conditions to a recipient’s acceptance of federal funds, the 20 conditions must be set out unambiguously. Roe v. Critchfield, 137 F.4th 912, 928-29 (9th 21 Cir. 2025) (citing Arlington Cent. Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ. v. Murphy, 548 U.S. 291, 296
22 (2006)). In considering whether a law provides clear notice for purposes of the Spending 23 Clause, courts begin with the text. Arlington Cent. Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ., 548 U.S. at 24 296-97. When the statutory text “is plain, the sole function of the courts—at least where 25 the disposition required by the text is not absurd—is to enforce it according to its terms.”
26 Id. (citations omitted).

27 not allege the retaliation examples as standalone claims; their inclusion provides context 28 and completeness regarding how California’s failure to comply with Title IX harms girls.

1       Here, as explained supra Part A.1, Title IX’s plain text explicitly references sex, 2 not gender identity, and employs sex as a binary term that is incompatible with gender 3 identity. Moreover, as above, the regulations adopted nearly contemporaneously with 4 the statute, and at Congress’s direction, also employs sex as a binary term that is 5 incompatible with gender identity. And multiple statutes since Title IX show that 6 Congress knows how to include “gender identity” explicitly in statutes when it so 7 desires, and did not in Title IX.

8       Facing this plain meaning, California attempts to conjure up confusion by pointing 9 (at 20) to the last time Defendant CDE entered into a Title IX contractual assurance on 10 November 20, 2024. See also Compl. ¶ 38. At that time, however, at least nine federal 11 courts had rejected a regulation attempting to redefine sex as “gender identity” under 12 Title IX, (similar to California’s policy here), because it subverted the original purpose 13 of the law.<sup>10</sup> More importantly, at that time the Supreme Court had already stated on 14 August 16, 2024, that “all Members of the Court today accept that the plaintiffs were 15 entitled to preliminary injunctive relief as to . . . the central provision that newly defines 16 sex discrimination to include discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation and 17 gender identity.” Dep’t of Educ. v. Louisiana, 603 U.S. 866, 867 (2024) (emphasis 18 added). California thus cannot claim lack of notice from the statute or the courts at the 19 time of its last contractual assurance.

20       Additionally, California received even more confirmation through two executive 21 orders. As a condition of accepting federal funds under Title IX, CDE was required to 22 and did submit assurances, which included an assurance that CDE “[w]ill comply with 23 all applicable requirements of all . . . executive orders.” Compl. ¶ 38; 34 C.F.R. § 24 106.4(a); see also 34 C.F.R. § 75.700 (“A grantee must comply with . . . Executive 25       <sup>10</sup> See, e.g., Tennessee v. Cardona, No. 24-5588, 2024 WL 3453880 (6th Cir. July

1 orders.”). On January 20, 2025, the President issued Executive Order 14168, 2 “Defending Women from Gender Ideology Extremism and Restoring Biological Truth to 3 the Federal Government.” Exec. Order No. 14168, 90 Fed. Reg. 8615 (Jan. 30, 2025).
4 Like Title IX, that Executive Order specifically “recognize[s] two sexes, male and 5 female,” and defines “sex” for the purpose of Executive Branch interpretation and 6 application of federal law as referring “to an individual’s immutable biological 7 classification as either male or female.” Id. § 2. The Executive Order also specifically 8 references federal funding. Id. § 3.

9 On February 5, 2025, the President issued Executive Order 14201, “Keeping Men 10 Out of Women’s Sports.” Exec. Order No. 14201, 90 Fed. Reg. 9279 (Feb. 11, 2025).
11 Like Title IX, the Order adopted definitions concerning “sex” from the prior Executive 12 Order 14168. Id. § 2. The second Executive Order also specifically directed the 13 Secretary of Education to “take all appropriate action to affirmatively protect all-female 14 athletic opportunities and all-female locker rooms” in line with Title IX, and “prioritize 15 Title IX enforcement actions against educational institutions (including athletic 16 associations composed of or governed by such institutions) that deny female students an 17 equal opportunity to participate in sports and athletic events by requiring them, in the 18 women’s category, to compete with or against or to appear unclothed before males.” Id.
19 § 2. The Executive Order also specifically references Title IX and federal funding. Id.

20 These Executive Orders provide more confirmation of Title IX’s meaning and the 21 United States’ potential enforcement. California cannot claim it lacked knowledge of 22 these Orders or their laying out the consequences for continuing to violate Title IX. Yet, 23 California continued to flout the law and keep drawing down federal funding afterwards.

24 California attempts (at 20-22) to invoke several inapposite Ninth Circuit cases that 25 particularly noted their limitations. For example, Defendant cite Doe v Snyder, which as 26 explained above denied a trans-identifying person’s request for a mandatory injunction 27 to get mastectomy surgery, and its reference to Title IX was unnecessary dicta. 28 F.4th 28 at 113-15 (“We do not reach the merits of Doe’s constitutional and statutory

1 challenges.”). Additionally, in Doe v. Horne again the court specified the decision’s
2 limited application to the particular facts and two students, skipped over the Title IX 3 claim, and noted nothing “precludes policymakers from adopting appropriate regulations 4 in this field.” 115 F.4th at 1110-11. Similar for Hecox, which issued a limited decision 5 as to how the statute applied to a single athlete, vacated the injunction beyond the single 6 athlete, and skipped the Title IX claim. 104 F.4th at 1091. And Hecox particularly 7 explained it was not deciding the “larger question of whether any restriction on 8 transgender participation in sports violates equal protection.” Id.

9 California also relies on Roe v. Critchfield, where the Ninth Circuit upheld an 10 Idaho statute limiting public school students to restrooms corresponding to their 11 biological sex against an Equal Protection challenge. The court found the statute 12 satisfied Equal Protection because it was substantially related to the important 13 government interest in privacy. 137 F.4th at 922-26.<sup>11</sup> In assessing the separate Title IX 14 claim, the court found the defendant lacked clear notice of Title IX’s prohibitions related 15 to restrooms, and affirmed the dismissal of the Title IX claim against the sex-separated 16 bathrooms. Id. at 929, 931-32. Importantly, and contrary to California’s assertions, 17 Critchfield explained that the Ninth Circuit has “never addressed [the definition of sex in 18 Title IX] directly, and we need not reach it here.” Id. at 928. The court found that 19 defendant did not have clear notice of Title IX’s prohibitions related to restrooms when 20 it accepted federal funding after it passed the statute in 2023. Id. at 921, 931 n.16.

21

22 <sup>11</sup> The Complaint includes allegations that California’s policy violates Title IX by 23 forcing girls to share intimate spaces, such as locker rooms, with boys and this 24 environment harms girls and their educational opportunities. See, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 5, 45, 25 54, 86-89; VMI, 518 U.S. at 550 n.19 (1996) (“Admitting women to VMI would undoubtedly require alterations necessary to afford members of each sex privacy from the other sex in living arrangements, and to adjust aspects of the physical training programs.”). Also, as above with sports, California’s policy throws out the biological reason for separating these locker rooms, and California thus is left with no non-discriminatory reason for separating the locker rooms at all. Without the biological justification, California lacks a basis to keep any boy from using either locker room, or any girl from using either locker room. To the extent any non-abrogated Ninth Circuit precedent forecloses this argument, the United States preserves this it. See Defs. Br. at 26 10 n.8 (citing Parents for Priv. v. Barr, 949 F.3d 1210, 1217, 1227-29 (9th Cir. 2020)).

1 Comparatively here, California had clear notice from the courts when Defendant CDE 2 entered the November 2024 contractual assurance, and surely had notice of the 3 Executive Orders and kept taking drawdown instalments of federal funding. Indeed, 4 Critchfield even particularly notes that an Executive Order could “provide prospective 5 notice” in a different case. Id. at 931 n.16.

6 California also contends (at 19, 21) it lacked clear notice because the United States 7 has not previously challenged the state’s law that has been in existence for “over a 8 decade.” This proposed circular trap, where the United States cannot challenge a law 9 unless it has done so previously, obviously cannot be required for notice. The United 10 States notes that the Education Department recently in 2020 made clear funding 11 recipients must still comply with Title IX and implementing regulations regardless of 12 state law or rule or regulation by an organization like CIF. Nondiscrimination on the 13 Basis of Sex in Education Programs or Activities Receiving Federal Financial 14 Assistance, 85 Fed. Reg. 30,026, 30,573 (May 19, 2020) (§ 106.6(h)). And enforcement 15 decisions “often involve[ ] a complicated balancing of a number of factors.” Heckler v.
16 Chaney, 470 U.S. 821, 831 (1985). Those include “whether agency resources are best 17 spent on this violation or another,” and “whether the particular enforcement action 18 requested best fits the agency’s overall policies. Id. Here, the increased frequency of 19 boys playing in girls’ sports across the Nation pursuant to California’s policy and other 20 states’ policies has made enforcement of Title IX and its protections for girls a high 21 priority. See id.; Exec. Order 14201 (confirming the policy of the United States to 22 “affirmatively protect all-female athletic opportunities and all-female locker rooms and 23 thereby provide the equal opportunity guaranteed by Title IX of the Education 24 Amendments Act of 1972”).
